Following The Tracks.

The products of an internationally active German software company are being sold on the domestic market, partly significantly under the regular price. Initial suspicions that they are pirate copies are unfounded. The products are genuine. But how do they get to Germany? Prevent's investigation in several European and Asian countries show that middlemen of the software company are involved in illegal re-import activities. Prevent also identifies the men in the background and the financiers of this case of organized white-collar crime, providing the basis for a comprehensive claim for damages and further legal steps.
